Not illustrated. 1609 Excerpt: .of a dog which had escaped from a laboratory, where he had been the subject of an experiment. The note is strengthened by a hospital scene, in which an unnecessary operation is performed on a woman, a poor patient. The home of a celebrated surgeon is admirably sketched in, with the intellectual cynical head, the timid wife who abhors scientific cruelty but dreads protest against it, the daughter, proud and high spirited, regarding her father as a benefactor of his race. The story unfolds naturally and quietly, bringing in powerful arguments without effort, and appealing to the reason even more than to the heart. There is no exaggeration, no violent declamation, no abuse, and every crucial statement made is verified by an exact reference to medical books or journals; these references form an appendix, and a footnote, giving the reference, is added in every case. We heartily recommend the book, as a keen weapon against the crime of vivisection, and trust that it may have a very large circulation. A. B. OCCULT CHEMISTRY.! .JO The publication of the above work will, I think, mark an important epoch in theosophical literature, and the time of its publication has been particularly well chosen, since the experiments of scientific men are now largely concerned with the field of investigation which is herein exposed to our gaze. It differs from such works as The Secret Doctrine in making a smaller demand upon the intuitive faculties and being in closer...
