It has been shown that where one farmer will write to a college for information there are many in the same community and a great number in the state who are desirous of having information on the same question but hesitate to ask it by correspondence. To help the latter class, the most important inquiries and those of general interest, together with brief articles of agricultural information, were formed into two-page articles, under the title of Agricultural News Notes, and sent to every newspaper in the state. This work was started in May, 1912. The Extension Division is also preparing each month a full newspaper page of agricultural articles, known as the West Virginia Farm Improvement Page. This is put in plate form, and sold by the Western Newspaper Union to all West Virginia newspapers desiring it. From sixty to seventy-five newspapers subscribe...
